Says Jews Of North Africa Should Train There

North African Jews represent the "biggest immigration problem in Israel today," Mrs. Ludwig Kaphan, national president of Women's American O. R. T. (Organization for Rehabilitation through Training), declared in New York.

"If these Sephardic Jews go to Israel before they have O. R. T. training, Israel can't cope with them; it has neither the time nor money," Mrs. Kaphan said at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, where Women's American O. R. T. held a three-day biennial convention.

Mrs. Kaphan outlined the O. R. T. North African vocational training program in an interview preceding the showing of a North African film, "Not Bread Alone," which she supervised when she visited Casablanca last summer. Mrs. Kaphan described the Jews at O. R. T. schools in Casablanca as the "most salvageable of any group, who learn quickly and are very adaptable."

With Mrs. Abrasha Haimson, of Los Angeles, president of the Southern California region, who accompanied Mrs. Kaphan to Casablanca, she gave a description of the Mallah, the ghetto in the center of the city where 80,000 Jews live behind a thirty-foot stone wall. Because conditions are so awful there, Women's American O. R. T. is building a boarding school for 1,000 girls, which should be open next month, Mrs. Kaphan said. Both the O. R. T. women agreed that, once trained, the North African is an acceptable citizen who can fit into the economic structure of Israel.

Mrs. Dorothea Greene of Schenectady, N. Y., a Quaker serving as director of O. R. T. schools in Germany and Austria to whom a citation was presented, said she had seen the Jewish situation where they had to become integrated into the community, according to the New York Times.

Dr. William Haber, acting president of the American O. R. T. Federation, traced its work in teaching skills from its inception to take care of Jewish victims of persecution in Russia to its current work in rehabilitating similar sufferers from Nazism and in North Africa.

Sharing the platform with Benjamin A. Cohen, Assistant Secretary General of the United Nations, Dr. Haber lauded him for describing the United Nations program for aid to underdeveloped areas.

Mr. Cohen visualized the O. R. T. vocational training program as contributing to world peace. "If we are going to have a lasting

Claims Yemenite Influx Brought On Cabinet Crisis

The influx of 100,000 Yemenite Jews in Israel had precipitated the Cabinet crisis there, Herman Hollander, former Israeli Under Secretary of Trade and Industry maintained in New York to the Times. Mr. Hollander, who had returned from Israel, defended the Misrachi stand on the religious issue at the headquarters of the Misrachi Organization of America. He explained that when the Yemenite Jews were questioned in the transitory camps on settlement in housing or education, business or agriculture, and found themselves confronted with anti-religious propositions it came time to get the religious policy of the country defined.

In two polls conducted last summer, one an impartial poll under Government auspices in the camps, 70 per cent had declared themselves in favor of religious education. Mr. Hollander said. He asserted that the religious issue had to be settled by the Knesset, the Israel Parliament, before questions of education or economy could be adjusted.

Mr. Hollander defined Mr. Ben-Gurion as the "greatest leader, most dynamic personality whose historic vision is unequalled by anyone in Israel, and expressed the hope that he, the Mapai (Labor) party and the religious bloc could work out a satisfactory partnership.

Mr. Ben-Gurion won his battle with the religious bloc that had precipitated Israel's government crisis.

He had told the Orthodox bloc that the choice was between agreeing to a reshuffle of the Cabinet and the appointment of Goring as Minister of Trade and Industry, or new elections.

The differences then had been narrowed down to the religious issues that most imports must conform to the Sabbath observance, that the state enforce Sabbath observance, banning interurban transport on Saturdays. It was understood Mr. Ben-Gurion had made concessions on these points.

peace we must bring up the standard of life and social development in every country of the world," he said. Pleading for the "establishment of common minimum standards of social development" as the key to peace, he praised O. R. T. for "making people more self-reliant."

A telegram from Aubrey Eban, Israel Ambassador to the United States, read to the assembly by Mrs. Henry Earle, convention chairman, said that "O. R. T. is proving that immigrants need not remain in the public charge."

Al Jolson left more than $4,000,000, it was reported, with the money to be divided equally among Jewish, Protestant and Catholic philanthropies after certain specific bequests. Among these, according to "Variety," theatrical trade newspaper, are funds for needy students at City College, Columbia University and New York University. Other beneficiaries included The Cedars of Lebanon Hospital, of Hollywood, and similar institutions.

Generous trust funds were established by Mr. Jolson for his wife, Mrs. Erle Galsbraith Jolson, and an adopted son, Alvin Jolson, "Variety" reported. Nothing was left in the will to Ruby Keeler, Mr. Jolson's third wife, nor to Al Jolson Jr., whom they adopted, but the report said each received a generous financial settlement at the time of the divorce. Mr. Jolson was also said to have made large contributions to the Northwoods Sanatorium, Saranac Lake, N. Y., and to have "added constantly new beneficiaries" as his wealth increased, says the New York Herald Tribune.

Mr. Jolson died in his hotel suite in San Francisco, Cal., of a heart attack as he was playing cards with Harry Akst, composer, and Martin Fried, his pianist and arranger. He was in that city to record a radio show with Bing Crosby, who arrived several hours after Mr. Jolson's death. Mr. Crosby, visibly shocked, paid tribute to Mr. Jolson "the most dynamic figure in show business."

Mr. Akst indicated a belief that the fatal heart attack could be ascribed to Mr. Jolson's recent tour of Korea. "I begged him not to go," he said. "I had a premonition it would be too much for him. He did forty-four shows for the boys in Korea. He was a great guy. It was the exhaustion." Other friends said that Mr. Jolson had been ailing ever since his return from Korea three weeks ago.

Col. John S. Malloy, special services officer for the Sixth Army, said that members of the armed forces would mourn the passing of Mr. Jolson as that of a generous friend who gave unsparingly of his great talent and warm personality to bring entertainment to the battlefield.

San Francisco, where Mr. Jolson was a local vaudeville idol long before he achieved national fame and "the big time," paid its final respects to the showman as his body lay in state in a mortuary. Men and women filed in a steady stream past the casket, which was surrounded by floral pieces which came from the city of Los Angeles, from Cecil B. De Mille and from scores of friends.

Al Jolson was one of the most attractive figures the theatre has given recently to America. Essentially a minstrel, he was everywhere popular. Such were his ability and reputation that he could—and occasionally did—dismiss his show's supporting company and then carry on all by himself for hours. It was he who created the genre of the "Mammy" song of some years back. Although there was a legion of imitators, none reached him. Finally, he is credited with having, single-handedly, saved the movie, reports the New York Times. "The Jazz Singer" gave a lead in the production of talking pictures.

There was some confusion about the birthplace and date of birth of Mr. Jolson. Some accounts said he has been born in Washington, D.C., others in St. Petersburg, Russia. He was born, according to some sources, May 26, 1886; others had it May 28, 1888.

Mr. Jolson, whose real name was Asa Yoelson, was the son of a Jewish cantor who was the sixth generation of cantors. The family settled in Washington and the father hoped his son would follow his profession. The boy lacked enthusiasm, however, and ran away. Shipped back from New York, he stayed home for a short time, then disappeared again. The Spanish-American War regiment to which he attached himself as a mascot gave him an apple and sent him back to Washington. Trip No. 3 was with Al Reeves' burlesque troupe, but that ended like all the others—back home.

During this semi-roving boyhood young Al made his first stage appearance as a member of the mob in Ziegfeld's "Children of the Ghetto." He also sang for a time in a Washington cafe. He also joined his brother and a friend and went into vaudeville in the team of Jolson, Palmer and Jolson. The troupe arrived in San Francisco at about the same time as the earthquake—a fact that had no great significance to Mr. Jolson. A little later the singer put on burnt cork for the first time, becoming the black-face comedian of later fame. The cork, for the records, was first used in Brooklyn.

In November, 1909, Mr. Jolson hired himself out to Dockstader's Minstrels at the weekly wage of $75. Two years later J. J. Shubert heard him sing with the minstrels and hired him for the Winter Garden shows. That theatre had just been built and the Shuberts were looking for talent. They found it in Erastus Sparkle of "La Belle Paree," Claude of "Vera Violetta," Gus of "The Whirl of Society," Gus of "The Honeymoon Express," Gus of "Dancing Around," Gus Jackson of "Robinson Crusoe Jr.," and Sinbad of "Sinbad." At the Winter Garden he sang "Mammy" for the first time and so set the whole nation howling for the Southland. And it was at the same theatre, some years later, that "The Jazz Singer" turned the tide of amusement.

Along came 1921, and Mr. Jolson—by that time recognized as America's greatest single entertainer—had a theatre named for him. He played "Bombo" there—it was up on Fifty-ninth Street—for a season and then toured with the show for the next two. Nineteen Twenty-five found Gus back at the Winter Garden in the show called "Big Boy."

The movies had been after him in the old silent days, of course, but with the Winter Garden so much nearer than Hollywood, he was reluctant to attempt a new medium. He had tried it briefly once before under the direction of D. W. Griffith and the samples were so unfortunate that he confessed himself "unhappy" and broke his contract.

But in 1927 the advent of sound films put a different face, or voice, on the matter. The first and electric result was "The Jazz Singer," in which, singing his way through a story that followed that of his own life, he was an instant success. Legend has it that the film grossed the record sum of $8,000,000. Certainly, its American success scarcely overshadowed its triumph in England, France and Germany, says the New York Times.

A new epoch in the Jolson career was now launched and with high profits the next year in "The Singing Fool." It was in this show that he first sang "Swing Boy," which was to resound through the land even more insistently than in earlier days had "April Showers" or "Avaston." With its sale of a million phonograph records, it even challenged "Mammy." That meant immortality, as Tin Pan Alley knows the word.

Other films—and all of them, of course, found him singing—followed at regular intervals until, in 1931, he turned once more toward the legitimate stage. Save for a concert tour and a few appearances in "Artists and Models" at the Winter Garden in 1926, he had not met an audience face to face since "Big Boy." It was "Wonder Bar," in March, 1931, which brought him back, this time to the Bayes Theatre. Though he discarded burnt cork for the first time in his career, he was once more the Winter Garden's hero, playing a one-man show, recalling to audiences the familiar Jolson tricks of old—the dynamic gestures, the emotional "delivery," the intimate conversational style.

When "Wonder Bar" closed in New York, after a three months' run curtailed by illness, he toured across the country in it. He was not expected again to be lured by the grind of regular stage appearances, for which he developed an increasing reluctance. More films—"The New Yorker," "Hallelujah, I'm a Bum" and "Wonder Bar" were some of them—compromised his professional life, together with radio programs. Horse racing was his greatest outside enthusiasm, nor was this the hobby of an amateur. He had his own stable.

Whenever he was he could generally be found in the news. Nervous and alert, he was also pugnacious, and at least one of his frigid encounters reached headlines everywhere in the country. Considering that his wife's feelings had been injured by a scenario written by Walter Winchell, the columnist, he knocked him down in full sight of thousands in the Hollywood Bowl. There was talk of a damage

U.N. Report Warns Israel And Arab States To End Tension Of Armistice

Tension in the Middle East, caused by the failure of Israel and the Arab states to reach agreement on their differences, has had "a detrimental effect on the structure of world peace," the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine reported.

In a report to Secretary General Trygve Lie, the body recommended that the General Assembly urge both parties to begin direct discussions under United Nations auspices without delay. It said it "does not doubt" that such talks would succeed.

The atmosphere at Lake Success, where debate on Palestine will begin soon in the Assembly, would not seem to warrant such optimism inasmuch as Arab spokesmen have refused to consider negotiations with Israel. With two uneasy years having passed since the cease-fire order, the report commented:

"The uncertainty stemming from the indefinite prolongation of a state of armistice cannot but have adverse effect on the fundamental interests of all concerned, both separately and with regard to the area as a whole. Not only does such a barren state of relations prevent concentration by the parties on their own affairs, but it also tends to undermine their security, internal and external."

It warned:

"The detrimental effects of such continuing tension on the structure of world peace cannot be ignored by the United Nations. Alarming proof of the natural tendency of such a stagnant situation to deteriorate is the increasing number of incidents which have resulted."

Armistice terms provided for a military settlement in the strictest sense, the report noted, but they "will never succeed in providing the guarantee of stability" essential to a final agreement. The Commission reported that it had not succeeded in promoting talks between the Israelis and Arabs, or even had induced either party to negotiate with it.

Nothing has been done "to dispel the doubts" each side entertains about the other's intentions, the report continued. Because a "state of armistice cannot last forever," in the opinion of the Commission it is necessary to replace the existing unsatisfactory system with something more permanent.

The report proposed that Israel make the first step "to counteract the dislocations caused by its own establishment among the Arabs." Then, the Arab countries would "endeavor to adopt their policy to the new state of affairs," the Commission added.

Disaster Strikes Sefrou In Morocco

BY WILLIAM BEIN, JOINT DISTRIBUTION COMMITTEE DIRECTOR FOR MOROCCO

Sefrou is a charming small city near Fez with a population of about 25,000 inhabitants, 5,000 of which are Jewish. Built on the slope of a mountain, it is generally warm with sunshine and green with trees and flowers; it has been aptly termed the "Garden of Morocco." The Medinah (Arab community) and mellah (Jewish ghetto) lie in the course of the Aggai River which supplies plentiful water, and on whose banks the Jewish women wash their laundry and their kitchen utensils. Except for the Sabbath, these banks resound daily to the chatter of the washerwomen.

But its very natural loveliness has been the undoing of Sefrou. Some sixty years ago there was a catastrophe when the river, swollen by rain, overflowed its banks and destroyed the mellah. This year, on September 26, the first day of Succoth, history repeated itself. A wild downpour of rain, estimated at six inches, in the course of a few hours transformed the peaceful Aggai — lined on both banks with houses inhabited even to the basements by Jews and Arabs — into a raging torrent. The waters tore away twenty houses with their inhabitants, their cattle, personal belongings, food-stuffs and merchandise. The sudden disaster has plunged the entire Jewish community of Morocco into mourning.

Until 1924 the Jews in Sefrou were permitted to live only within the precincts of the mellah. They were crowded into a few thousand square yards of territory near the residence of the Pasha under whose protection they lived in order to escape pillaging by neighboring Arabs. The Jewish quarters are almost literally pasted one on top of the other, and many of the dwellings are accessible only by means of ladders hooked on the walls. Two or three stories of basements are also densely inhabited. The Jewish community is extremely poor. The city has no industry, and a few Jews are artisans. Since the war trade and commerce have passed into the hands of the Arabs. Many of Sefrou's Jews have strayed to Fez, Meknes, Casablanca and other cities since they could find no occupation and means of livelihood in Sefrou.

For many months now the Joint Distribution Committee has been carrying on extensive feeding, medical and clothing activities in Sefrou as most of the city's Jews live from hand to mouth, or on charity. (For example, about 600 children eat in JDC-supported canteens.) Since the establishment in Sefrou of a dispensary, with a full time physician, the high incidence of child mortality has been checked. Sefrou was also the place chosen for the conduct of an exhaustive investigation designed to gauge the type and full extent of the problems existing in Morocco's Jewish communities, but the catastrophe which overwhelmed the city has, of course, rendered our investigation impossible.

Immediately upon news of the disaster, I rushed to Sefrou, more than 200 miles from Casablanca, accompanied by a number of my staff. Upon our arrival we found the community desperate, but in a kind of stupor. Victims and Jewish community leaders alike seemed unable to face the full import of the catastrophe. Meantime French and local authorities and members of the neighboring Jewish communities had arrived in order to ascertain the extent of the problem. The Jewish Boy Scouts of Sefrou were working to salvage people and their belongings. The cloudburst had started late on Tuesday. Half an hour later the city's reservoir, high on the mountain, unable to stand the unusual pressure of the water, burst. Untold gallons of muddy water rushed down the mountainside and overflowed the banks of the Aggai. Houses lining the river were washed away like matchsticks.

Almost the entire family of Abba Ittah, seven persons consisting of two old women and five children, were trapped in their basement apartment which was flooded. One survivor of this family is Ittah, himself, whom curiosity drove outside to see the rain. The second, is his wife, who was badly injured and has been hospitalized. Another victim, Arosh Abraham, thirty-six, was in a room with his family of five. He was standing near the riverside wall of his house, which was suddenly torn away. A few hours later his body was found several miles from Sefrou, and he was buried. His family escaped death by clinging to the remaining walls of the house with their nails.

In Sefrou, I attended the mass funeral of the eight persons. It is estimated that the bodies of 13 Jews are still under the debris. They cannot be removed, since, owing to the flooded basements, a number of houses are in imminent danger of crumbling to bits. In all, 21 Jews — six women, fourteen children and one man — lost their lives in the disaster. Twenty-eight Arabs were drowned. Meanwhile 226 Jewish families — numbering 1,038 persons, are completely without shelter. Nearly six hundred Arabs and Jews additional, had to be evacuated from their houses, as all the basements of the entire lower mellah and

Medinah are flooded and the houses will have to be demolished. Thirty Jewish shops were completely flooded, the goods washed away or destroyed. Their owners were completely ruined. Over 1,000 Jews are left only with the clothing they wore when they escaped; they have no bedding, no food, no funds and no hope of recovering anything the flood demolished. The electric plant is destroyed and water is being distributed by army trucks in containers.

Over 400 of the homeless Jews are temporarily housed in the Em Habanim school. Two hundred others are sheltered in the Alliance Israelite School. Many other Jews have taken refuge in the already crowded quarters of relatives or friends whose houses are situated away from the banks of the Aggai, and thus escaped destruction. Upon arriving in Sefrou, I had a number of meetings with the members of the Jewish community and established several sub-committees to take charge of feeding, clothing, lodging, health and other matters. I was able to help organize, and attended the first distribution of food at the Em Habanim school, and ordered JDC Casablanca to dispatch three tons of evaporated milk, egg powder, canned fish, baby food, and other items for Sefrou's Jews. Just as soon as possible a feeding kitchen for 1,000 people will be established.

Bearing in mind that the disaster had also befallen the non-Jewish population — and that to favor Jews alone would be ill-taken — I issued, through the Community Council, another two tons of food supplies consisting of powdered milk, powdered eggs and evaporated milk and canned fish, for the local Moslem population. This was accepted with thanks by the District Pasha. Along with sleeping bags and quilts, JDC has just furnished layettes, thirty bales of S.O.S. clothing, shoes, coats and amenity supplies to the Jewish people of Sefrou. I have also approved a grant of a million francs for emergency aid — mostly for bread, purchase of blankets and indispensable expenditures until government and private aid, which is being organized, should arrive.

JDC has also facilitated Sefrou's medical staff. Our OSE physician and five nurses are visiting the schools and houses, and doing preventive work in order to head off the outbreak of epidemics. Medical supplies were required, and these have been dispatched. Miraculously, the health situation is comparatively good, and only two children were injured. One of our staff went to Sefrou to supervise and expedite the relief work there. Several extremely important problems have arisen in Sefrou: It is inconceivable that the old Jewish quarter should be restored. The catastrophe which happened 60 years ago and has now repeated itself, may strike again. This makes it imperative that the mellah should be completely abandoned. The building of new houses will take much time and require hundreds of millions of francs.

The schools must be evacuated of refugees and reopened immediately in order not to leave Jewish children on the streets. Even if all the synagogues, many of which were destroyed, and other public buildings were to be occupied, there is not sufficient space to accommodate the homeless. Temporary barracks will probably be built, with the participation of the government, Jewish public and perhaps, JDC. But this does not offer a final solution. Food for more than one third of the population is an equally important question. Literally thousands of Jews are without steady prospects of bread, and with no hope of any income during the near future. They will need substantial assistance for some time to come. Many of the Jews of Sefrou are hoping against hope that they will have a chance to go to Israel. Owing to limited emigration opportunities, and because of health problems, only a few were able to leave previously. If conditions permit, a special emigration quota should be given to Sefrou in order to enable at least a small number of them to emigrate.

In conclusion I should like to underline that French and local authorities, the Community Council, and local Jewish communities are seeking to help the Jews of Sefrou. In the meantime JDC has provided effective emergency aid, alleviating as far as possible the plight of the Sefrou Jews, who were my profound admiration with the dignity and fortitude with which they are facing their calamity.

Dropsie Head Says Jews Are In Exodus

A proposal that the scholars of the Hebrew University and The Dropsie College combine forces to produce the manuscript of a history of the Jews from the earliest times to this period was made to Hebrew University authorities by Dr. Abraham A. Neuman, president of The Dropsie College, in Philadelphia, Pa., on his return from a four month trip to Europe and Israel. The noted historian said: "It is well known that there is no adequate history in any language that does justice to the experiences and achievements of the Jewish people during their long record of almost four thousand years. No single author of talent or genius," he stated, "can possibly cope with so vast a subject."

"I envision a great cooperative history of the Jews from the earliest times to our own period on a magnificent scale similar to the celebrated Cambridge Histories. It is clearly a task that calls for scholarly organization and cooperation on a large scale. Such an enterprise requires not only the services of all the scholarly personnel of the Jewish world; it must combine the philosophical viewpoint of the new Israel with the more universal outlook of American scholarship."

Dr. Neuman, who likened this historical project with the epochal undertaking of The Dropsie College in publishing a new thirty-volume version of the Apocrypha, said that his proposal "met with interest and understanding" among Hebrew University scholars and that he had reason to feel that his "suggestions will bear fruit." He had high praise for "the deep concern in Israel for cultural and scholarly interests not only in university circles but among the men in government, and this despite the most perplexing economic, social and political struggles in which the people of Israel are engaged."

On the basis of his extensive tour of Europe, Dr. Neuman expressed the belief that "there is no hope of a revival of Jewish cultural and spiritual life on the continent of Europe. As one visits the synagogues and talks to individuals and groups in various European centers," he said, "one cannot escape the impression that European Jewry is in potential or actual exodus."

Dr. Neuman reported on the acceptance of American Jewish scholars in Israel, particularly of such Dropsie graduates as Doctors Judah Kaufman, Eliezer Sukenik, Zev Vilnai, Ben-Zion Netanyahu, Bar Baroma and Harry Davidowitz in such varied fields as archaeology, philosophy, language, geography, history, and literature.

BRESLIN-MELVIN
(MULDOSKY)

The marriage of Miss Rita Melvin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. S. Muldosky, 123 Beatrice Street, to Gilbert Judah L. Breslin, son of Mr. and Mrs. Harold Breslin, 79 Willowbank Boulevard, took place at Shaarei Shomayim Synagogue, on Tuesday, October 17, at half-past eight o'clock. Wearing a sleeveless gown, having high round neckline, and looped bouffant hoop skirt, with matching mitts, and Juliet cap, Mrs. Norman Bruner was matron of honour in American Beauty coloured faille, and Miss Gilda Breslin, maid of honour, was similarly gowned in pink faille. Three literary awards for works of poetry of literary merit and Jewish interest will be made by the Jewish Book Council of America, sponsored by the National Jewish Welfare Board (JWB). It was announced by Dr. Mortimer J. Cohen, Council president. An award of $100 will be made for a book of poetry in English; one of $100 for a volume of poems in Hebrew; and a similar award for a book of poetry in Yiddish. The Council also makes annual awards to the author of the best work of fiction; and to one for a book of non-fiction of literary merit and general Jewish interest. To be considered, the volumes must have been published in the United States. In the event the award is made for a translated work, the judges will be at liberty to give the award to the original poet, the translator, or they may decide to divide it between the original author and the translator or editor.

"How much longer will the German Government tolerate 'Heil Hitler' and Swastika?" asks Egon Jameson in an article in the Frankfurt daily, Die Neue Zeitung. The author reports that newspaper stands in Berlin, Hamburg and other German towns are still selling printed matter displaying the swastika. A swastika is still to be seen on the church of Pfaffing in Bavaria, although newspapers have repeatedly drawn attention to this fact. Two insurance companies in Schwabisch Hall and Hamburg continue to send out reminders with "Heil Hitler" printed on them.

Youth Groups To "Adopt" Settlements

A plan for the "adoption" of recently established agricultural settlements in Israel by American Jewish youth groups as part of a two-way program designed to cement educational and cultural relations between youth in both countries has been mapped by the National Jewish Conference, nationwide youth body sponsored by the National Jewish Welfare Board (JWB). The announcement was made this week by M. David Weiss, Conference chairman. The Conference represents more than 300 local and regional Jewish youth and young adult councils and national Jewish youth organizations. The "adoption" project in the U. S. is part of an overall program sponsored throughout the world by the Keren Hayesod (Palestine Foundation Fund) youth and hechaluta department in Jerusalem. The National Jewish Youth Conference, as the most representative body of organized Jewish youth in this country, has been asked by the Keren Hayesod to become the coordinator for youth in communities across the United States for the "adoption" program. The proposal was made by Ascher Segall, representing the sponsoring agency, and acted on by delegates to the Conference's annual assembly in September.

Basic objectives of the program are to: 1) strengthen the educational ties between pioneering youth in Israel and Jewish youth in other countries; 2) afford organized units of Jewish youth throughout the world the opportunity to assume some practical responsibility

Tribunal Hears Case Of Man Accused Of D.P. Killing

In the high-ceilinged former Reid mansion at 15 East Eighty-fourth Street, New York, an ancient Jewish custom was revived. A three-man board convened to hear a former inmate of a German concentration camp charge another member of the Jewish faith with having caused the death of the accuser's brother in 1946.

The tribunal was suggested by the American Jewish Congress, present owner of the building, with accuser and defendant agreeing to abide by its decision. The charge was first made on June 20, when Benjamin Krieger, a 42-year-old Brooklyn fish dealer, said he recognized a passer-by as the man who had sent his brother to his death.

The accused, Mayer Mittleman, 34, then accompanied Mr. Krieger to a police station, where the police refused to make an arrest. Mr. Mittleman returned to Oliphant, Pa., where he leads synagogue services and slaughters chickens in accordance with kosher rituals. He is not a rabbi.

Speaking slowly in Yiddish, Mr. Krieger repeated the charge. Sitting in judgment were Leo Pfeffer, associate general counsel of the American Jewish Congress and a member of the New York and United States Supreme Court bars; Rabbi Simon Feferbaum, member of the executive committee of the World Jewish Congress and a former member of the Polish Parliament; and Rabbi Emanuel Rackman of Congregation Shaare Tefilah, Far Rockaway, a faculty member of Yeshiva University.

Mr. Krieger, who conducts a fish store at 60 Lee Avenue in the Williamsburg section, testified that in the spring of 1946 he and his brother, Zelman, were inmates of Muhlendorf. He identified the husky Mr. Mittleman as the "block clerk" of their barracks. One night, he said, while in line awaiting supper, he saw Zelman approach the inmate who was ladling out food.

Mr. Mittleman, he continued, was at the head of the line with a check list. A dispute developed between his brother and the block clerk over whether Zelman had already received his portion, and then he saw Mr. Mittleman strike Zelman over the head with a metal plate. Mr. Krieger testified. A few days later, he said, Zelman died of his injuries.

Germs detect soap — which fact helps make cleanliness one of the best defences against disease.

Two witnesses for Mr. Mittleman testified that the accused man had been in the concentration camp at the time of the alleged assault.

says the New York Times, but said they had no knowledge of the incident. Both said they had known Mr. Mittleman and that he had been a block clerk.

But, said Jacob Grossinger of 544 Bedford Avenue, Brooklyn, the accused had been too ill at the time of the purported attack to attend to his duties. Rabbi Moses Hoffman of 296 Marcy Avenue, Brooklyn, said he remembered having conducted a Passover service in the barracks at that time and that Mr. Mittleman was confined to his bed with illness.

The case was adjourned to October 22. The tribunal will release its findings ultimately to the Jewish community in Oliphant, Pa., without recommendations or sanctions.

ISRAEL GETS NEW FACTORIES

Three United States manufacturers have recently decided to move into the growing Israeli industrial field, says Economic Horizons, monthly publication of the Jewish Agency, 18 East 80th Street, New York. The manufacturers are: the U. S. Hoffman Machinery Corp., producers of laundry and similar equipment; the Philco International Corp., of Philadelphia, Pa., refrigerator manufacturers; and the Bulova Foundation, which intends to set up a $500,000 tool and die shop in the Jewish State.

U. S. Hoffman, together with Israeli Industries Inc. of Tel Aviv, has established Hoffman Orient Inc. for the manufacture in Israel of washing and pressing machines, extractors and tumblers. The new firm has been guaranteed exclusive selling rights throughout the Middle East as well as Turkey, Greece, and Eastern Europe. These areas had previously been out of U. S. Hoffman products due to the lack of dollar exchange.

Philco refrigerators will be assembled in Israel by the Amcor Refrigerators Manufacturing Co. Ltd. of Tel Aviv. The factory, already completed, has an initial daily capacity of 40 to 60 refrigerators. An order for 250 refrigerators for Turkey has already been received and will be filled out of the first months production. The Bulova tool and die plant is now under construction in Tel Aviv, and will be equipped with modern American machinery. The Bulova Foundation is a trust set up by the members of the Bulova family, owners of the Bulova Watch Company.

Group Leaders Pledge Support To Israel Aid

Asserting that Israel's economic potentialities "appear limitless" and that the young nation could look forward to "a secure and prosperous future," U.S. Secretary of the Treasury, John W. Snyder said in Washington, D. C., that Israel could play a major role in the development of the Middle East. The Cabinet member's statement was made before 1,200 delegates from forty-four Jewish organizations, who continued their effort to blueprint a program aimed at helping Israel solve its economic difficulties.

Israel Finance Minister Eliezer Kaplan said that Israel would require $1,500,000,000 to ease the immigration of 600,000 Jews before the end of 1953. At a Jerusalem conference last month of fifty American Jewish leaders and Israeli officials it was agreed that Israel's economic problem might be solved by grants-in-aid from the United States Government, an enlarged United Jewish Appeal campaign, the stimulating of private investment, and possibly an Israeli bond issue in the U. S.

Delegates interpreted Mr. Snyder's praise of Israel's agricultural and industrial development as evidence of increasing close relationship between the United States and Israel. Reviewing its economic progress since its establishment as a nation, Mr. Snyder asserted that "Israel has undertaken a vigorous program in support of individual freedom and peaceful progress."

He listed Israel's plans for irrigation, afforestation, swamp drainage, soil improvement and the building of schools and highways, and added that "all of these things recall to Americans our own pioneering days."

"When we turn our attention from the urgent problems of the present," he said, "and look toward the future, the opportunities which lie ahead of Israel appear almost limitless. If firm and lasting peace can be achieved—in the area of world politics, and the smaller orbit of the Middle East itself — an important role in the advancement of the entire area of which it is a part."

Secretary Snyder then pointed to Israel's economic potential, its sea and air routes to other lands, and above all, its abundant supply of human skills and human resources, and asserted: "Israel can look forward to a secure and prosperous future."

Strong pleas for giving Israel grants-in-aid were made by Benjamin G. Browdy, president of the Zionist Organization of America, and Representative Abraham J. Multer of New York. Mr. Browdy declared that grants-in-aid of $500,000,000 by the United States Government over the next three years "will be repaid in a value higher than money" by Israel.

"Such grants-in-aid will serve to make Israel strong and able to contribute in a decisive manner to world peace for which this country strives so intently," he said.

Representative Multer pledged his efforts to urge the Government to make grants-in-aid and expressed hope that if an application for such aid were made by Israel, "it will be granted expeditiously."

Jewish organizations pledged the support of their memberships to the program of aiding Israel. Frank Goldman, president of Bnai B'rith, pledged the support of 350,000 men and women in his organization's 951 men's lodges and 383 women's chapters. Adolph Held, chairman of the Jewish Labor Committee, representing 500,000 affiliated with A. F. of L. and C. I. O. unions, said that the American labor movement recognized the role Israel played in establishing itself as "a bulwark of political freedom and democratic values in its part of the world."

Henry Albert, national commander of the Jewish War Veterans, said, "It would be a grave disservice to the Jews of Israel, a dire disservice to the cause of democracy itself — if the Jews of America were to confuse the existing armistice in the Middle East for an actual condition of peace."

He added that "peace and security can only be assured to Israel when the immigrant tens of thousands have been restored to productive health."

My Pilgrimage To Israel

I should like at this time to discuss three phases of Israeli life, namely religion, the kibbutz, and civil service. There are no neat divisions in Israel of Jewish religious life as in America. Here in the Western Hemisphere, we can easily speak of the Orthodox, the Conservative, the Reform. This is not so in Israel. Roughly speaking, Orthodoxy is a minority in the midst of a majority which is non-Orthodox, and both of these have many variations of religious beliefs and practices. There is a close association between organized religion and the state.

As a Reform Jew I am opposed to a secular state divorced from religion, yet at the same time, I am equally opposed to a hierarchy which seeks to control the state. One must appreciate that the present control of the chief Rabbinate in Israel in matters of marriage and divorce is that which was inherited from Turkish rule and later from the Mandatory Government, where recognition has ever been given to religious courts of the Christian, Jewish, and Mohammedan communities. Because the present government of Israel is a coalition government, made up in the main of Mapai and that of the religious block, the Ministry of Religion plays an important role. While this department of religion does not interfere with personal conduct it does control marriage and divorce and insists that the dietary laws be observed in the army and in public institutions.

The status of woman in Israel from religious point of view remains the traditional one, despite the fact that women have come to play a most important role in every department of Israeli life. The Kohen is still not permitted to marry a divorcee; civil marriages do not exist; woman legally is still in the ancient legal state as far as inheritance laws are concerned.

What's being done to remedy the situation? Nothing official. For the moment there are more important things facing the people of Israel, that of immigration, economy and defence. Hence, no constitution has yet been adopted, defining Israel as a democratic state where the synagogue is separated from the state. As a Liberal Rabbi, I am distressed that of the four progressive Rabbis in present day Israel, only one is permitted to officiate at marriages.

It is interesting to observe that even the Chief Rabbinate is not sufficiently Orthodox for some Jews in Israel. Thus there is a small sect known as "Neture Karta" who look down upon the Chief Rabbinate because it dares to have dealings with the government and thus interferes with the promised arrival of the Messiah. The "Neture Karta" do not recognize the existence of the state as such and have boycotted the elections to the Knesset. These boycotted also the Herzl Day observance and even petitioned Abdullah to take them under his protection.

As a Liberal teacher, I am opposed to a theocracy but I do favour a Torahocracy, wherein the State of Israel in all its ramifications will find inspiration in the teachings of Judaism and the state will be motivated by the high ideals of the religion of our fathers.

Though the majority of the population in Israel today is non-Orthodox and many are even non-religious, yet a religious climate prevails everywhere. Nowhere else in the world do you experience the spirit of the traditional Sabbath observance with its quiet solemnity and repose as in Israel. Of course, the Sabbath observance varies in different communities. It is best kept in such communities as Jerusalem, Safed, Tiberias. It is less observed in Haifa and Tel Aviv, though even in these communities there is a solemn and joyful atmosphere when Sabbath arrives. I confess that one Sabbath afternoon in Haifa, trying to observe a traditional Sabbath sleep, I was more than disturbed by the music of an American swing-band playing at the hotel for tea dancers, where the crooner loudly sang such jazz melodies as "If I Knew You Were Coming I'd Baked A Cake", in Hebrew.

The majority of the Jewish festivals are observed throughout the land, though these may have an agricultural or national emphasis. In the Seder service new elements have been introduced and added to the Hagqadah. The Menorah is found on top of public buildings. The Bible is studied in all the schools, both of the religious and the liberal groups, and even in the secular schools. The very striving for social justice is in itself a high expression of religion to be found in the collective settlements and in the co-operatives. There is no doubt that the majority of the population in Israel today, would eagerly welcome a liberal expression of Judaism. It will come, it must come, though not in a revolutionary way but rather in an evolutionary way. Israel must never be a secular state, for the re-establishment of the State of Israel was brought about by the ever yearning on the part of the Jew for the reconstitution of the Holy Land of Israel, the Holy People, who is ever bearing witness to the Holy God, the One God, the Father of all mankind.

We are of the conviction that a new synagogue is yet to arise in Israel. It will not be a synagogue on the pattern of East European Jewry. Neither will it be on the pattern of any type of American Judaism. It will be a synagogue native to the New Israel where the religious laws will be modified by life itself and the prayerbook revised in accordance with the needs of Israel Reborn. How splendid it would be if a Sanhedrin were speedily convened by the religious authorities and the problems of the new needs in religious life were grappled with and new laws enacted to meet the new epoch which has come in Jewish life, because of the establishment of state. Even the leftists in Israel must acknowledge the debt which the state owes to Judaism. Israel Reborn must continue its search for God, for therein lies the meaning and purpose of the Jew in the world.

One of the remarkable economic manifestations is the Kibbutz. It came into being out of economic necessity and out of social and national idealism. This communal settlement is an original contribution of the Jewish Homeland to agrarian Reform.

The Kibbutz is a large working family with equal standards of living for all. No money is used in the internal relationship of the settlement. Each works according to his ability and within the framework of the general plan devised by all members. There is equal allotment of living quarters, a common kitchen and a common commissary.

Everything is owned by the community. All personal things are possessed by the group. Everyone draws clothing from a common stock. His wants are satisfied in accordance with his needs. He who requires more gets more. Those who need less do not envy the others. He who joins the communal settlement, gives up his money, his private house furniture, his books, his clothing, all his earthly possessions, and no individual accounts are kept. The women in the communal settlement has absolute equality and an equal voice in all decisions.

The most striking and most important building in the Kibbutz is the Beth Yeladim, The Children's House. The children of the Kibbutz are here under the care of expert nurses. Twice a day during luncheon and during recess after working hours before dinner, the children spend time with their parents. These communal settlements constitute the backbone of the Israeli economic life of today. The majority of these are self-sustaining and many are now in possession of considerable wealth.

The communal life of Israel is a most unique contribution in voluntary co-operative living and may yet be the answer to a world so wounded and broken because of exploitation and individual acquisitiveness so rampant in the realm of our economic life. What a privilege it was for me to spend an afternoon in Ramat Yochanan, not far from Haifa Fifteen years ago I was in this communal settlement, when the pioneers commenced their wrestling with stone and soil. Behold, what a transformation has now taken place in this community named after Field Marshal Jan Smuts! It is now a garden of beauty and fruitfulness and of a habitation of joy and satisfaction of spirit.

In the two years of the state's existence, Israel has developed a remarkable civil service of 12,000 officials. One need only to visit the Kiryah, the government offices, the Knesset, and come in contact with the representatives of governmental departments, to realize what a fine intelligent Civil Service has been so speedily built up, in such a short space of time. These men and women labour to advance the state, for the most part in a spirit of dedication and consecration. We rejoice to salute the government of Israel with its civil servants who compare remarkably well with government officials of States much older and more experienced in the science of statehood and international life.

suit for $500,000. Mr. Jolson, proud of his prowess, grinned and enjoyed the whole affair.

He was married four times, three of the unions ending in divorce. His first two wives were Henrietta Keller and Alma Osborne Carlton, who was known on the stage as Ethel Delmar. The third, Ruby Keeler, the dancer, he married in Port Chester, N. Y., in September 1928, after a Broadway courtship. The dancer had a part in "Hold Onto Your Hats," the musical show in which Mr. Jolson returned to Broadway in September, 1940. She appeared in the show while it was on the road earlier in the year, but left in Chicago before the Broadway opening. In October, 1941, Miss Keeler was married to John Lowe, a California broker. She and Mr. Jolson had adopted Al Jolson Jr. as an infant in 1935.

His fourth wife was Eric Galbraith, a 22-year-old film extra from the South, whom he married on March 24, 1945, after an elopement to Quartzsite, Ariz. He had met her a year before when he was touring a Hot Springs (Ark.) hospital where she was an X-ray technician.

Mr. Jolson quit "Hold Onto Your Hats" after a successful Broadway run in February, 1941, because of ill health. He had suffered attacks of grippe and pneumonia. In August of that year he reopened "Hold Onto Your Hats" in Atlantic City, and continued on the road until November, when the show closed after the death of his manager, Bobby Crawford.

Then came Pearl Harbor, and Mr. Jolson immediately volunteered for war service. He had toured every war front, singing the old songs, "Mammy" and "Sonny Boy," which he found to be favorites with the troops, from Alaska to the Southwest Pacific, and from England to North Africa, India and Brazil. He appeared under the banner of the USO, but went out of his way also to give independent shows at any post that had an audience of two or more, paying his own expenses, according to the New York Times. He was in Sicily soon after the first invasion barges, and left there to return home by clipper at the end of September. He was described as looking fit but tired on his arrival home.

His tours were officially recognized as having been morale builders of great value. Mr. Jolson wore a uniform resembling a private's, although he had refused a commission and was not in the service. Soon after returning from entertaining soldiers on three fronts in October, 1943, he became ill with a combination attack of pneumonia and malaria.

Mr. Jolson joined Columbia as a producer in February, 1944. His first assignment, in March of that year, was as supervisor of the new version of the late George Manker Watters' play "Burlesque," starring Rita Hayworth. He also played himself in the movie "Rhapsody in Blue," the story of George Gershwin's life. His voice was dubbed in the songs of the leading role of a screen unknown playing his part in Lawrence Hazard's screenplay of his life, "The Jolson Story," produced by Sidney Skol-sky.

"The Jolson Story" proved to be one of the top money-making movies in Hollywood history, says the

New York Times. The combination of young Larry Parks, playing the title role, and Jolson's voice in the songs which made him famous gave the picture an immediate box office success. It is estimated that the picture grossed more than $13,000,000 since its release in 1946.

The success of "The Jolson Story" once again pushed the singer into the entertainment limelight. Scores of guest appearances on the radio and his own show on the air waves soon followed. His phonograph records enjoyed boom sales.

In 1949 the Columbia Broadcasting System obtained exclusive rights to his services on radio and television for three years.

In August, 1949, the film, "Jolson Sings Again," with Larry Parks again playing the title role and Jolson singing, was released by Columbia Pictures. It enjoyed a substantial success.

Mr. Jolson was one of the movie stars named in the charge made by the Army newspaper, CBI Roundup, that entertainers quit of the soldiers in the China-Burma-India area because it was too tough. He replied by saying he had never been booked by the CBI sector. He further retorted with the declaration that the "G.I.s" who wrote the accusation "don't know what they're talking about."

Al Jolson was a contemporary of Sophie Tucker, "the last of the red hot mammas"; of Eddie Cantor and George Jessel and a handful of other top-drawer performers whose counterbalance of sentimental ballads and overwhelming theatrical exuberance made an era of burnt-cork minstrelsy a unique period in the American theater and, perhaps, the theater of the world.

He had a broad, brassy voice not unlike the sound of a slide trombone and in the days when he was wearing the traditional black face, white gloves and string tie, he would drop to his knees and unabashedly wring more sentiment from "Mammy" and "Sonny Boy" than anyone could have dreamed was there.

He may not have invented it, but he was certainly the outstanding practitioner of the melodramatic trick of talking the second verse and chorus of a song, says the New York Herald Tribune. He was an intuitive showman who could bring his listeners to an emotional pitch with ease. No matter what some of his critics had to say about the intrinsic worth of his abilities, audiences found him enormously fascinating.

refugees. The report recommended the following:

"The return of that number of refugees to Israel which would be consistent with their own best interest; the immediate payment of compensation for property of non-returning refugees; the adoption of measures by the Arab states for reassuring the full reintegration of non-returning refugees, and the providing of all necessary facilities for resettlement by the governments directly concerned, with the technical and financial assistance of the United Nations."

Debate on the Palestine refugee question is scheduled for the special Political Committee of the General Assembly, probably this month, although the Arab delegations have been pressing for an earlier date.
